Postcards: please check the text and the QR codes

We are about to print new Language Centre postcards. Before they go to the printer, we would like a second pair of eyes on the wording and on the QR codes and links. It should take about 15 minutes.

> The design and layout have already been agreed, so there is no need to comment on colours, pictures or where things sit on the card. We are only asking about the words and the links.

What is in this document

There are five cards, each printed on both sides. Each side has its own page (ten pages in all), shown at its real printed size (A6, about the size of a standard postcard). Under each side is a short list of what to check.

1. Read the words

- Spelling, grammar and punctuation.
- Facts: prices (£35 / £45 / £55), opening hours, levels (B1+, C1+), the phone number, email address and postal address.
- Anything that is out of date, unclear or missing.

2. Scan each QR code with your phone

1. Open your phone's camera and point it at the QR code (the black-and-white square, bottom right of the card). Most phones show a link to tap; you do not need a special app.
2. Tap the link. Check that the page that opens has the heading listed under the card.

If printing, choose "Actual size" (not "Fit to page") so the cards come out at their real size; this is the best test, because it is how people will use the real cards.

If scanning from a screen, zoom the document to 200% or more first. At normal zoom the code is too small on screen for a phone to read. That is expected, and it does not mean the code is faulty.

3. Try the short links

Each card also prints short web addresses beginning bit.ly/ for people who would rather type than scan. Type one or two into a web browser and check they open the page listed. The letters after bit.ly/ are case-sensitive, so type capitals as capitals.

How to send your comments

Reply to the email with the card number and side (shown at the top of each page) and what you noticed, for example: "Card 2 front: typo in the second paragraph" or "Card 4 back: the QR code opened the wrong page". If everything is fine, a quick "all OK" is really helpful too.

"Visit our Study Centre" is the back of both Card 1 and Card 5. You only need to read it once, but please scan both codes.
